The Name is Desert Rose Gin

Let’s put our desert rose symbol or logo.

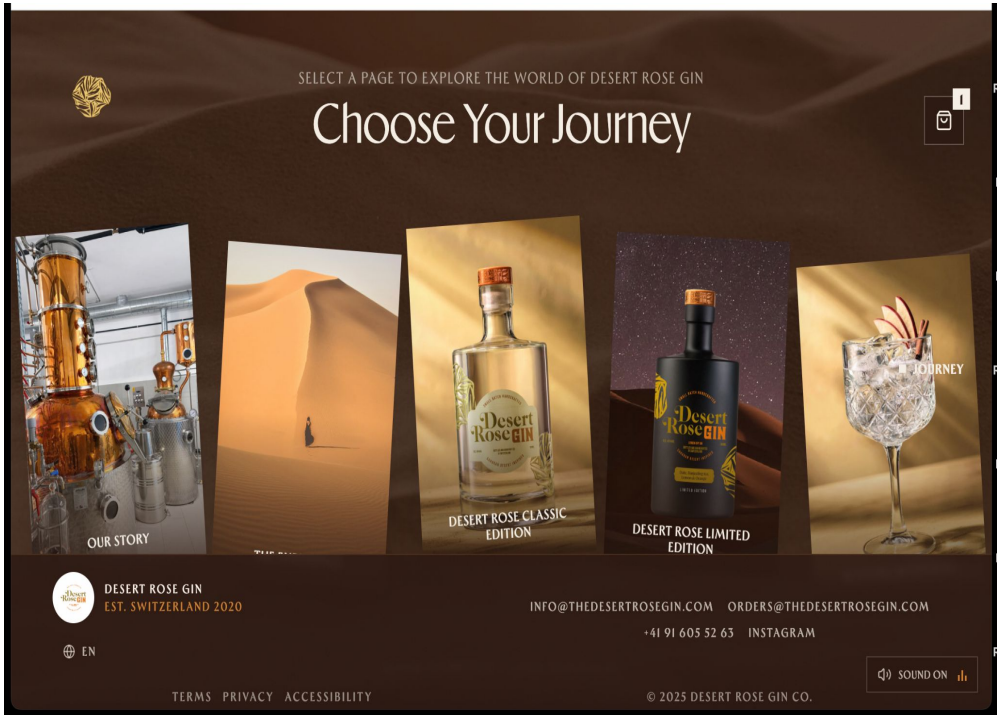
When the site first opens, the only visible element is the rose. The logo and any introductory message are missing, so there is no clear brand reference or guidance for the user.

The video background is very dark and feels as if it was intended to display text or additional elements, but currently nothing appears on top of it.

A possible solution would be to introduce the logo when the page loads. The logo could appear in the center of the screen after a few seconds, emerging from the dark video background. A subtle fade-in, possibly combined with a slight scale animation, would create a more cinematic and intentional introduction while clearly establishing the brand.

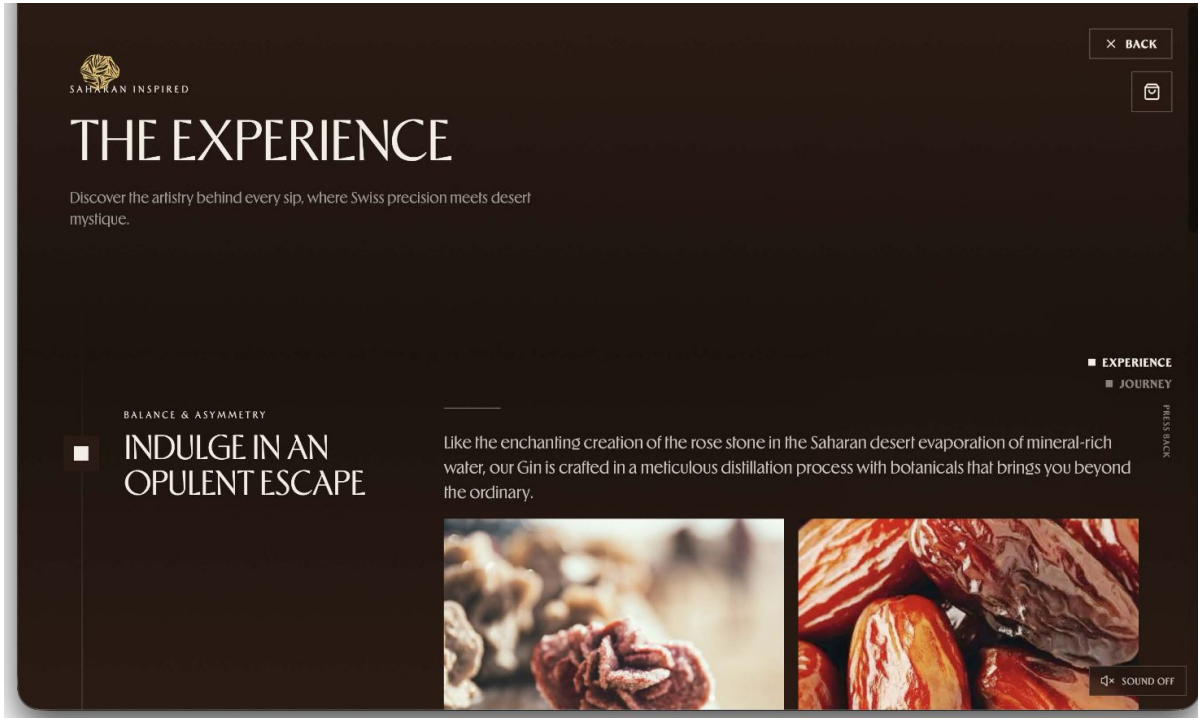


The footer information becomes misaligned when resizing the page.

As the viewport changes size, the email addresses, phone number, and Instagram link lose their alignment. The layout should remain consistent and properly aligned across different screen sizes.

The card can be straight?

this way was ok just need it to be adapted when resizing the page



The UX is a bit confusing because there are three different ways to return to the homepage: the rose, the back button in the top right corner, and the “Journey” button.

It’s also unclear what is meant by “PRESS BACK.” If the back key on the keyboard is used, nothing happens. Let’s remove it ;)

The grid view works, but when a cocktail is selected, the interface returns to the same grid view of single cocktail. Can we keep the grid full when selected?

It would be more effective to have a dedicated page for each cocktail, where users could also have the option to download the PDF. Can we add the cocktail info - description before downloading?

it’s always Desert Rose Gin

I think you need to check the optimization of the text and element sizes on the pages. They always end up overlapping / getting cluttered.

The box display needs to be adjusted and centered.

The 200 ml version also needs to be resized, as it currently appears too narrow, la rimpicciolirei così si capisce meglio che è un formato diverso.

Here’s an example I made with AI, just for the layout/structure of the elements — needs to be adapt it to our colors and font.

Is it possible to change the hand-shaped cursor to other elements?

I checked the language versions and not all the pages are translated into the selected language. It seems that only the homepage is translated.
